

Girl Scouts of California's Central Coast

Equali-Tea Patch Program Must be completed by January 15, 2021

The suffrage (right to vote) movement was unique in that it was the first time; women across the nation became politically active on women's right. These female activists, called Suffragettes protested their right to vote with marches, letters and articles in local papers, and were often arrested while participating in these activities.

Tea had traditionally been a way for women to socialize and organize. Suffragettes used tea parties as a way to educate others and plan protest activities. These teas began to be called Equali-Teas.

This patch program aligns with GSUSA's Democracy badges at every level.
